Dear sir,

I saw the link to your steering wheel iPad mount, and clicked on it expecting a parody site of human stupidity. Instead, I find that an educated man has apparently designed and is marketing this atrocity. (<http://www.steering-wheel-ipad.com/index.html> ) If this is, indeed, a joke, then your humor may be a little too subtle for some. I suspect from your level of education that you may, in fact, be marketing this with the intention of "culling the heard" by letting the idiots kill themselves while using this device, thus proving that Darwin was correct. I can certainly see how you might feel that way, but consider that the means of suicide that you are offering them is the same road that intelligent people drive on, as well. Oh, and just for your information, your device violates many regional driving safety laws, not only regarding "distracted driving", but also regarding air bag deployment.

Again, if this is a joke (which I still hope it is, and that no one would disregard the value of human life as it would seem to otherwise), you might try being a little less subtle in your humor.

Regards,
Mr. Aylev
